Chapter 1 by Andrew Hartmann

Utopia, that's were it all started. Back in 2020, life was literally a utopia. Everything was just perfect. No wars, no fighting, no arguing. That all changed when they came.

It started when I turned 21. I was just minding my own business walking through the streets of our city, literally called Utopia, when I noticed something felt odd. I just couldn't put my finger on it.

I couldnt it was the air

Chapter 3 by Laura Frost

That was it! The air was more humid today- that never happened. Weather in the city was controlled, everything stayed a perfect sunny temperature with a nice breeze, never too hot or cold.

I continued on, confused, but then my day got even stranger. Sure, things like this happen in the Outerlands. But here? Never.

It started to rain.

Chapter 4 by Ʌɔɹɐ◖ ɐɹǝ⊥   ✎

Up until now, I only knew the word, I only saw pictures of rain. I didn't know how beautiful, but cruel it felt. How pretty it looked, falling on bright rooftops. But, when it drips on grey, ugly roofs it looks like hell on earth, maybe like Voldemort has control of the city. Rain. I savour this rain, but also hide from it. The system will have this under control soon, won't they? If they can't stop rain, then can they stop other, worse things? Worry clouds my senses. The system is failing.

Chapter 5 by The_Solarpunk   ✎

Just then, I heard a CRASH as the dome caved in above me and the torrents of rain started pouring in. The worry was replaced with sheer fear. What the hell is going on? Then I heard another, the panicked streets around me almost stood still when we realized that bits of houses crashed through the dome. There was a hurricane in the outerlands and it was coming close.
